

To Whom it May Concern:

I understand the National Association of Broadcasters is supporting legislation that would limit my ability to obtain information that is important to me, information for which I pay a subscription each month. I travel extensively and it is important that I have the ability to obtain traffic and weather reports wherever I am, whenever I have the need. Today, local radio stations do not devote the resources to providing this information except in rare cases and at very limited times.

In my view the proposed legislation places unjustified restrictions on information and attempts to maintain the oligopolistic position that terrestrial radio attempts to retain. The variety and choice provided by satellite radio is what prompted me to subscribe. Terrestrial radio doesn't choose to provide these kinds of resources.

Satellite radio has been a wealth of entertainment for me, my wife and my children. And whether it is in Dallas, where I live, or Houston, where I frequently travel, or this weekend, in my rental car in Washington, DC, it is comforting to know that I have a resource for traffic and weather conditions regardless of the day or night.

Sincerely,
